1-1. Admissions Policy

The program will permit a select number of students to obtain an LL.M. degree, with instruction entirely in English, and will be the first program of its kind at a Japanese law school in Tokyo. The LL.M. program is intended to train students who will be globally active legal professionals and legal staff of global companies and international institutions. We welcome applications from those who wish to improve their international practice skills through interaction with people from a variety of cultures and regions.

At least 30 course credits are required for completion of the program. For successful applicants who do not demonstrate that they have already gained basic legal practice knowledge (e.g., through membership in a bar association or corporate legal staff experience), an additional 6 course credits (i.e., at least 36 course credits in total) will be required for degree completion. Students who are subject to this requirement will be informed after the day of announcement of admissions results.
